

Two ideas; because why not?

Automatic nudity censorship

An app that automatically detects nudity and creates a visual artifact or effect over it that distorts your view enough as to not be able to see it. I wonder how distracting one could really make a projection on the Moverio.

So you have the visual effect constantly shift shape and color to make it impossible to see any contours beyond it. The projection area on the Moverio is of course a bit limited, but let's see this as a proof of concept.

I imagine we market it to frightened parents as a means to shield their children from the stark, naked reality at all times. Or maybe it can be used by people with a weak heart, on the beach when there is nudity allowed. Or just to anyone looking to not be distracted from the story and violence of Game of Thrones.

King Midas simulator

Everything that you touch would get a shining gold overlay projected over it. Midas' story is powerful already, this would really bring the message home.

It could be a form of meditative relaxation for business execs. Zero effort and risk - everything they touch just turns into gold.

