

A small study on the good things in life

Entry F

Abstract

Chocolate and coffee have all been shown to have local positive short-term effects. Whereas the negative effects are very well studied most studies have focused on a single of the above mentioned substances with no regard on how they affect each other. In this study we wish to show that the short-term positive effects are enhanced when presented together, so as to make you not care about the negative effects.

Moreover we have done a quick study on the transport effects of brittle objects. This study was done in parallel with the study above and did hopefully not change the outcome of the first study. If it did it will be purely psychological which unfortunately is outside the scope of this study.
